—Mrs. Katie Jones returned home at 8 o'clock yesterday morning and ate breakfast with her usual appetite. She had not been ill, no one had waylaid her, and she had made no attempt to commit suicide. Seized with one of those strange whims which not infrequently inhabit the female breast, she concluded to spend the night at the house of a neighbor, probably because piqued with her husband. In the meantime he lived several hundred years, and in the steps he natually took to find her led the way to a very annoving pubher led the way to a very annoying publicity of a trivial family affair. Fills orders from the title of a novel that is a very free exposure of Mormonism, and it is full of interest from the first word to the last. The author has kept within the limit of real life, and nowhere rises above the level of the people she describes so well. Her scenes are real, and her men and women are of the flesh and blood order. The story is full of pathos, of appealing and often heartrending passages that stir the reader to the depths of his heart. Mormonism in its insidiousness and baseness, the law, brutal cunning of the men who keep it alive, and the bested ignorance of those who are their victims, is painted with rare fidelity and vividness. If You Value Your Health Read This Sol. Coleman's Unequalled Ko-Ko Tulu Chewing Gum has a wonderful hold on public favor, not only in this section, but in the North, where its merits are ac-knowledged and appreciated. Nojdrugstore in New York City is without it, and not a a day passes but an order from some new rity attests the strength of its popularity, it is now universally conceded that the habit of chewing Ko-Ko Tulu is an aid to digestion, and conducive to that placidity of mind necessary to acute and protracted brain work. This is due somewhat to the continuous motion of the muscles of the jaw as well as to the potent nerve tonic contained in its composition. It is palatable succulent, sweet, fragrant and wholesome and offers just sufficient resistance to the teeth to make the set of mastication pleasurable without fatigue. It lends to the breath a grateful fragrance free from the suspicion that aught but nature caused it. It is made of the very best quality of gum, and never sticks to the teeth or loses its pleasant flavor. Sold everywhere at 5 cents a package.

REMEMBER the races at the Natatorius Tupsday night. Admission, 25 cents. The Cottage Gallery. The superior work and low prices at th place have made it very popular.
